

Nowadays, Spain has got a lot of bilingual schools where pupils can learn languages like English or German, which ~~they~~ are taught by professional teachers. However, which are their pros and cons?

One of the main advantages is that if you study in a bilingual school since you are just a child, you learn that language faster than if you try to learn it when you have grown.

Moreover, it's very useful speaking some languages for a lot of ^{jobs} works.

On the other hand, it's possible that pupils couldn't understand the lessons well. Another argument against bilingual schools is they can be very expensive for some families.

On balance, I would say that bilingual schools are useful, but in my opinion, they should be cheaper.
